

Title: Assistant Clinical Professor; Co-Director, Master's of Advanced Studies in Marriage and Family Therapy Program

Job Description:

The School of Social and Family Dynamics at Arizona State University is seeking an Assistant Clinical Professor and Co-Director of the Master's of Advanced Studies in Marriage and Family Therapy (MAS-MFT) to join our team. This is a full-time, benefits-eligible appointment with no tenure implications. The successful candidate will have a master's degree or higher in marriage and family therapy, family studies, or a related discipline. The candidate should be independently licensed or eligible for an independent license as a marriage and family therapist in Arizona. The candidate should have experience providing behavioral health services to individuals, couples and/or families in a clinical setting. The candidate should have strong knowledge of family systems theory, and family systems-based therapy models.

The individual will share administrative oversight of the MAS-MFT Program, including student selection, orientation and assessment; mentoring and advising of students; and internship placement and coordination. The individual will prepare course syllabi and will teach four courses in the MAS-MFT Program and will oversee a section of Practicum each semester.

Service: All faculty engage in service to the university, to the academic unit, and to the community. Examples of such service include but are not limited to serving on committees, participating in processes to maintain and improve academic quality, mentoring students, participating in faculty governance, and contributing to the profession of MFT at the local, state, or national level.

The individual will be self-motivated and able to work both independently and collaboratively.

This position is located in Tempe, AZ.
